Reading Between the Lines

Five things to see at the New York Art Book Fair.

September 25, 2014 3:27 PM | by Fan Zhong

The annual New York Art Book Fair, which runs from Friday, September 26 to Sunday, September 28, at MoMA PS1 in Queens, is an extravaganza of visual stimuli. The sheer tonnage of eye candy can be hard to parse, so we asked Printed Matter's Shannon Michael Cane, who curates the NYABF, to steer us toward the five things he's most looking forward to.

We Did It Norway

"Every year, I focus on a country—this year it's Norway. I was lucky enough to travel there for 10 days earlier this year on a research trip to curate this room. The ladies are stealing the show in this country. There's an amazing exhibition in PS1's boiler room by FRANK, and a book launch by the image-bank artists Eline Mugaas and Elise Storsveen, who are known as ALBUM."

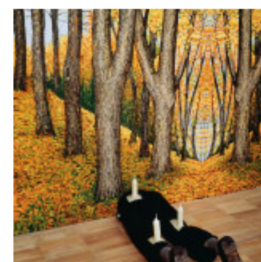

The NYABF, with support from the Norwegian Consulate General in New York, presents KUNSTNERBØKER, a curated selection of 26 Norwegian booksellers, institutions, artists and independent publishers, accompanied by programming, screenings, exhibitions and interventions related to this cross-section of Norway's artist book community.
